Summary

Signed into law on April 9, 2008, the Second Chance Act (P.L. 110-199) is designed to positively impact the life outcomes of individuals transitioning into society after experiencing incarceration. The Second Chance Act authorizes grants to state, local, and federally recognized tribal governments to provide support strategies and services designed to reduce recidivism and create opportunities for people returning from prisons, jails, and juvenile facilities. Some of the key provisions of the Second Chance Act include:

- Offender Reentry Substance Abuse Treatment Grants to improve the availability of drug treatment.
- Demonstration Grants to state, local, and tribal governments that may be used to promote safe and successful community reintegration.
- Mentoring Grants to nonprofit organizations that may be used for mentoring adult offenders or offering transitional services for reintegration.
- Technology Career Training Grants to state, local, and tribal government agencies to assist in establishing programs to train individuals in prisons, jails, or juvenile residential facilities for technology-based jobs and careers during the three-year period before their release.
- Recidivism Reduction Grants to state departments of correction to reduce recidivism through planning, capacity-building, and implementation of effective and evidence-based interventions.
- National Adult and Juvenile Offender Reentry Resource Center which establishes a national resource center to collect and disseminate best practices and to provide training and support for reentry efforts.

Current Legislation

In the summer of 2015, Senators Patrick Leahy (D-VT), Rob Portman (R-OH), and Marco Rubio (R-FL), and Representatives Danny Davis (D-IL), Jim Sensenbrenner (R-WI), and other House and Senate leaders introduced bills to reauthorize the Second Chance Act. Reauthorizing the Second Chance Act redoubles our nation’s commitment to supporting the transition from incarceration to communities and reducing recidivism. It also offers opportunities to continue to add to the strength of the Second Chance Act. The bill includes provisions that will lead to even greater positive impacts on the lives of millions of Americans, including the following:

- Inclusion of nonprofit organizations as eligible grant recipients;
- Explicit language listing transitional jobs as an allowable use of Second Chance Act grants;
- A detailed definition of transitional jobs that reflects the National Transitional Jobs Network’s recommendations; and
- Authorizing career training (including subsidized employment when part of a training program) for people who are incarcerated.

Allowable uses of Second Chance Act Demonstration Grant funds include:
- Employment services
- Substance abuse treatment
- Housing
- Family programming
- Mentoring
- Victims services
- Methods to improve release and revocation decisions using risk assessment tools

Why Congress Should Reauthorize the Second Chance Act.

The Second Chance Act strengthens communities by creating opportunities for some of our most vulnerable citizens to achieve economic stability. Reauthorizing the Second Chance Act redoubles our commitment to supporting the transition from incarceration to communities and reducing recidivism.

The Second Chance Act addresses a national crisis. In the past three decades the United States has seen a 500% increase in our nation’s incarceration rate. There are 2.2 million people residing in America’s prisons and jails each year, more than 600,000 Americans return to communities from prisons and jails across the country. Many of these people are unable to find sustainable employment due to a myriad of barriers they face once released. Now more than ever comprehensive and effective reentry programming that includes employment is critical. Indeed, research shows that individuals recently released from prison who participate in a transitional job program are far less likely to recidivate. Second Chance Act reauthorization helps realize criminal justice reforms that address the crisis head on. Efforts to advance these types of reforms are rapidly gaining national attention.

The Second Chance Act is an investment in evidence-based programs that have been proven to reduce recidivism. The provisions in the reauthorization bill will create even more opportunities for states and local communities to meet the employment needs of people returning from incarceration through the development of transitional jobs programs and other interventions that support successful transitions to communities for individuals returning from incarceration. Recidivism rates in several states have seen substantial reductions due to the types of support strategies and services funded by the Second Chance Act. Examples of those strategies include: the use of risk assessment tools to develop individualized services designed to reduce a person’s risk of reoffending; community supervision officers’ use of intermediate sanctions as an alternative to incarceration for probation violators; and diversion of non-violent offenders to community supervision coupled with extensive support services. Ensuring successful reentry means both safer communities and improved use of taxpayer dollars. Transitional jobs are another promising example of the types of initiatives funded by the Second Chance Act. Transitional jobs not only create long-term savings of nearly $4 for every $1 spent, but they have also been proven to reduce recidivism rates; reduce reliance on public benefits and lower tax payer costs; improve educational outcomes for dependent children; create positive economic ripple effects in communities by increasing local demand for goods and services; and benefit employers by increasing productivity, financial well-being, and customer satisfaction.

We encourage members of Congress to cosponsor the Second Chance Act today and move forward toward swift passage of this important legislation.
